CHRONIQUES ET COMPTES RENDUS

A Major New Journal for 1988 :

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF LEXICOGRAPHY

We live in a golden age of lexicography, as evidenced by the recent proliferation of major historical and regional dictionaries, learners' dictionaries, mono- and bi-lingual dictionaries, and projects such as the New Oxford English Dictionary.

At the same time, the subject is becoming increasingly interdisciplinary. Lexicographers now find themselves sharing concerns with theoretical and applied linguists, philosophers, psychologists, computer and artificial intelligence specialists. In recent years, several lexicographic research institutes have been founded and national and international lexicographic associations have come into existence. There is now no doubt that lexicography is a subject of theoretical as well as commercial and social importance.

In 1988, Oxford University Press will launch a major new quarterly journal. The International Journal of Lexicography will be edited by Dr Robert ILSON, a long-time consultant on lexicography, and an Honorary Research Fellow of University College London, backed by an editorial board which is both international and interdisciplinary. The International Journal of Lexicography will be concerned with all aspects of lexicography, theoretical and practical, diachronic and synchronic. Its scope will include dictionaries of all types -- general and specialised, monolingual and bilingual -- and other lexically oriented reference works, such as thesauruses, phrase books, usage guides, concordances, and glossaries. The journal will be interested in the organisation of lexicographic projects and of dictionary publishing, the use of dictionaries, the recruitment and training of lexicographers, and the development of lexicography as a profession.

The journal will also be concerned to include articles from disciplines relevant to lexicography, such as lexicology, terminology, semantics, pragmatics, linguistics, language-teaching methodology, philosophy, psychology, computer science, and artificial intelligence.

In recognition of the international character of lexicography and the importance of dictionaries in many cultures, the International Journal of Lexicography will welcome contributions from all countries, and will consider material written in any language.

The International Journal of Lexicography will appeal not just to lexicographers, but also to those working in linguistics, phonetics, language-teaching, computer science, and artificial intelligence. For people involved in the complex areas where these disciplines overlap, the International Journal of Lexicography will soon become essential reading.

Full instructions to authors are given on request.

Please send submissions to Dr Robert ILSON, 58 Antrim Mansions, Antrim Road, London NW3 4XU.

LEXICOGRAPHICA SERIES MAIOR

THE FIRST 20 VOLUMES

When almost five years ago H. E. WIEGAND proposed the idea of a double series in the field of lexicography, many of us were rather sceptical. Since then, experience has proved that he was right to take the risk : the 3 volumes of Lexicographica. International Annual for Lexicography together with the 20 volumes in the Lexicographica. Series Maior now available cover all the major aspects in the theory and practice of dictionary making.

As one of the seven editors of the Series Maior (and for the current year in the driver's seat of the 'Geschäftsführender Herausgeber'), I cannot help but being pleased about our record so far. The list below covers most issues in the field, broken down into the following 'genres' : 5 volumes of conference and seminar proceedings, 4 volumes on historical themes, 3 volumes of critical documentation, 3 reprint editions of dictionaries, 2 volumes on computational topics, 1 volume each on usage issues and the treatment of particles, and one introductory textbook.

International in outlook, multilingual in conception and scholarly in treatment, the Series Maior has effectively become a universal discussion forum and a basic training library for the serious student of lexicography. Among the forthcoming or planned titles are a general bibliography, a book on the value of illustrations in both the dictionary and the encyclopedia, another set of proceedings from the Copenhagen Symposium, and collected essays by famous authorities in the field. One long-term dream of the editors, to encourage the application of at least some of the principles discussed in other volumes to the compilation of new dictionaries, is coming true when we publish a Chinese-English dictionary of idioms and proverbs in 1988.

If you know of a suitable manuscript, contact the editors c/o the publisher's address, who will also send you the guidelines for authors and a catalogue (members of EURALEX and DSNA qualify for discount prices) : Max Niemeyer Verlag, Postfach 2140, d-7400 Tübingen, West Germany.
