Abstract: An exploration of the "apophantic striving" that the theater stimulates. Each live performance, being unique, challenges the memory of the event and its translation into linguistic form. The very etymology of the word perceptio, its Stoic echoes, suggest the continuity that develops from the sensitive to the verbal in the experience of the beholder. This experience, once it has become a narrative, can finally be summed up in a simple name: that of the artist, sign of self and sign of the times.
