

Paroles de la tribune 1870-1914

Un âge d'or de l'éloquence ?

Publication type: Article from a collective work

Abstract: The Third Republic incarnated, at least until the Great War, a golden age for parliamentary eloquence. This article analyses the characteristics of this privileged moment of oratory expertise which was at once inscribed in the continuity of the deliberative heritage resulting from the French Revolution, but which also adapted itself to the coming of parliamentary democracy, and the modernity of a renewed political society.
